The country of Eightbalistan has no borders, no official language, and no currency. There is no military, no AI, no GMOs, no Red 40 or Yellow 5, no fracking or deforestation, no chemical weapons of mass destruction, no fossil fuel industry, no opioid crisis, no cartels, and no human trafficking.

No one is persecuted, discriminated, cyberbullied, violated, or exploited on the basis of citizenship, race, gender, sexuality, religion, ability, or taste in music. There are no billionaires, no politicians, no corporations, no BBLs, no influencers, no liberals, no police, no prisons, no visas, no homelessness, no poverty, no hunger. No one works to live. No one is in debt. There is no doom scrolling. Eightbalistan is not recognized by any presidents, dictators, monarchs, prime ministers, celebrities, nor is it recognized by the the dalai lama or the pope. It is not part of any league of nations. It is not mentioned in ancient scripture or holy books.

Eightbalistan declares its independence from landlords, tech companies, big oil, big pharma, media conglomerates, streaming services, the algorithm, and all sports governing bodies. Eightbalistan demands the immediate surrender and dissolution of the fédération internationale de football association, the department of homeland security, immigration and customs enforcement, the federal bureau of investigation, the central intelligence agency, the so-called united nations, the international monetary fund, the genocidal fascist confederate united states of america, the genocidal nazi settler-occupier apartheid ethno-state of so-called israel, mossad, and the nobel committee. Eightbalistan demands the immediate and unconditional liberation of all children, political prisoners, colonized lands, and indigenous, black, and brown peoples under occupation and forced displacement worldwide.

LONG LIVE EIGHTBALISTAN.

THREE 'NATIONS' OF SPECTACLE, THREE 'NATIONS' OF INTERNMENT

Every world cup city sits amidst plains, rivers, and mountains punctuated by suffering. In Canada, I've plotted residential school sites with confirmed or likely mass unmarked graves. From the 1850s onwards, hundreds of thousands of First Nations, Inuit and Métis Nation children were separated from their families and forced to attend these 'schools,' where they were stripped of their language and culture, often abused, and 1 out of every 20 would die.

In the USA, I've plotted ICE detention facilities with at least 50 active detainees. These facilities are concentrated along the 'border' with Mexico and in the south, where a constantly mutating legacy of slavery and ethnic cleansing has continued, unyielding, for more than 400 years.

In Mexico, I've plotted municipalities with at least 10 fosas comunes, mass unmarked gravesites. Under the backdrop of decades of neoliberal rule and capitalist extraction, the state has and continues to turn a blind eye to violence and forced disappearances, particularly against women and indigenous communities. The fates of more than 100,000 people remain unknown, and every day, nearly 30 more go missing.

WE DIDN'T NEED A WORLD CUP TO CROSS YOUR 'BORDER': CONTEMPORARY MIGRATION BETWEEN WORLDCUP 'NATIONS'

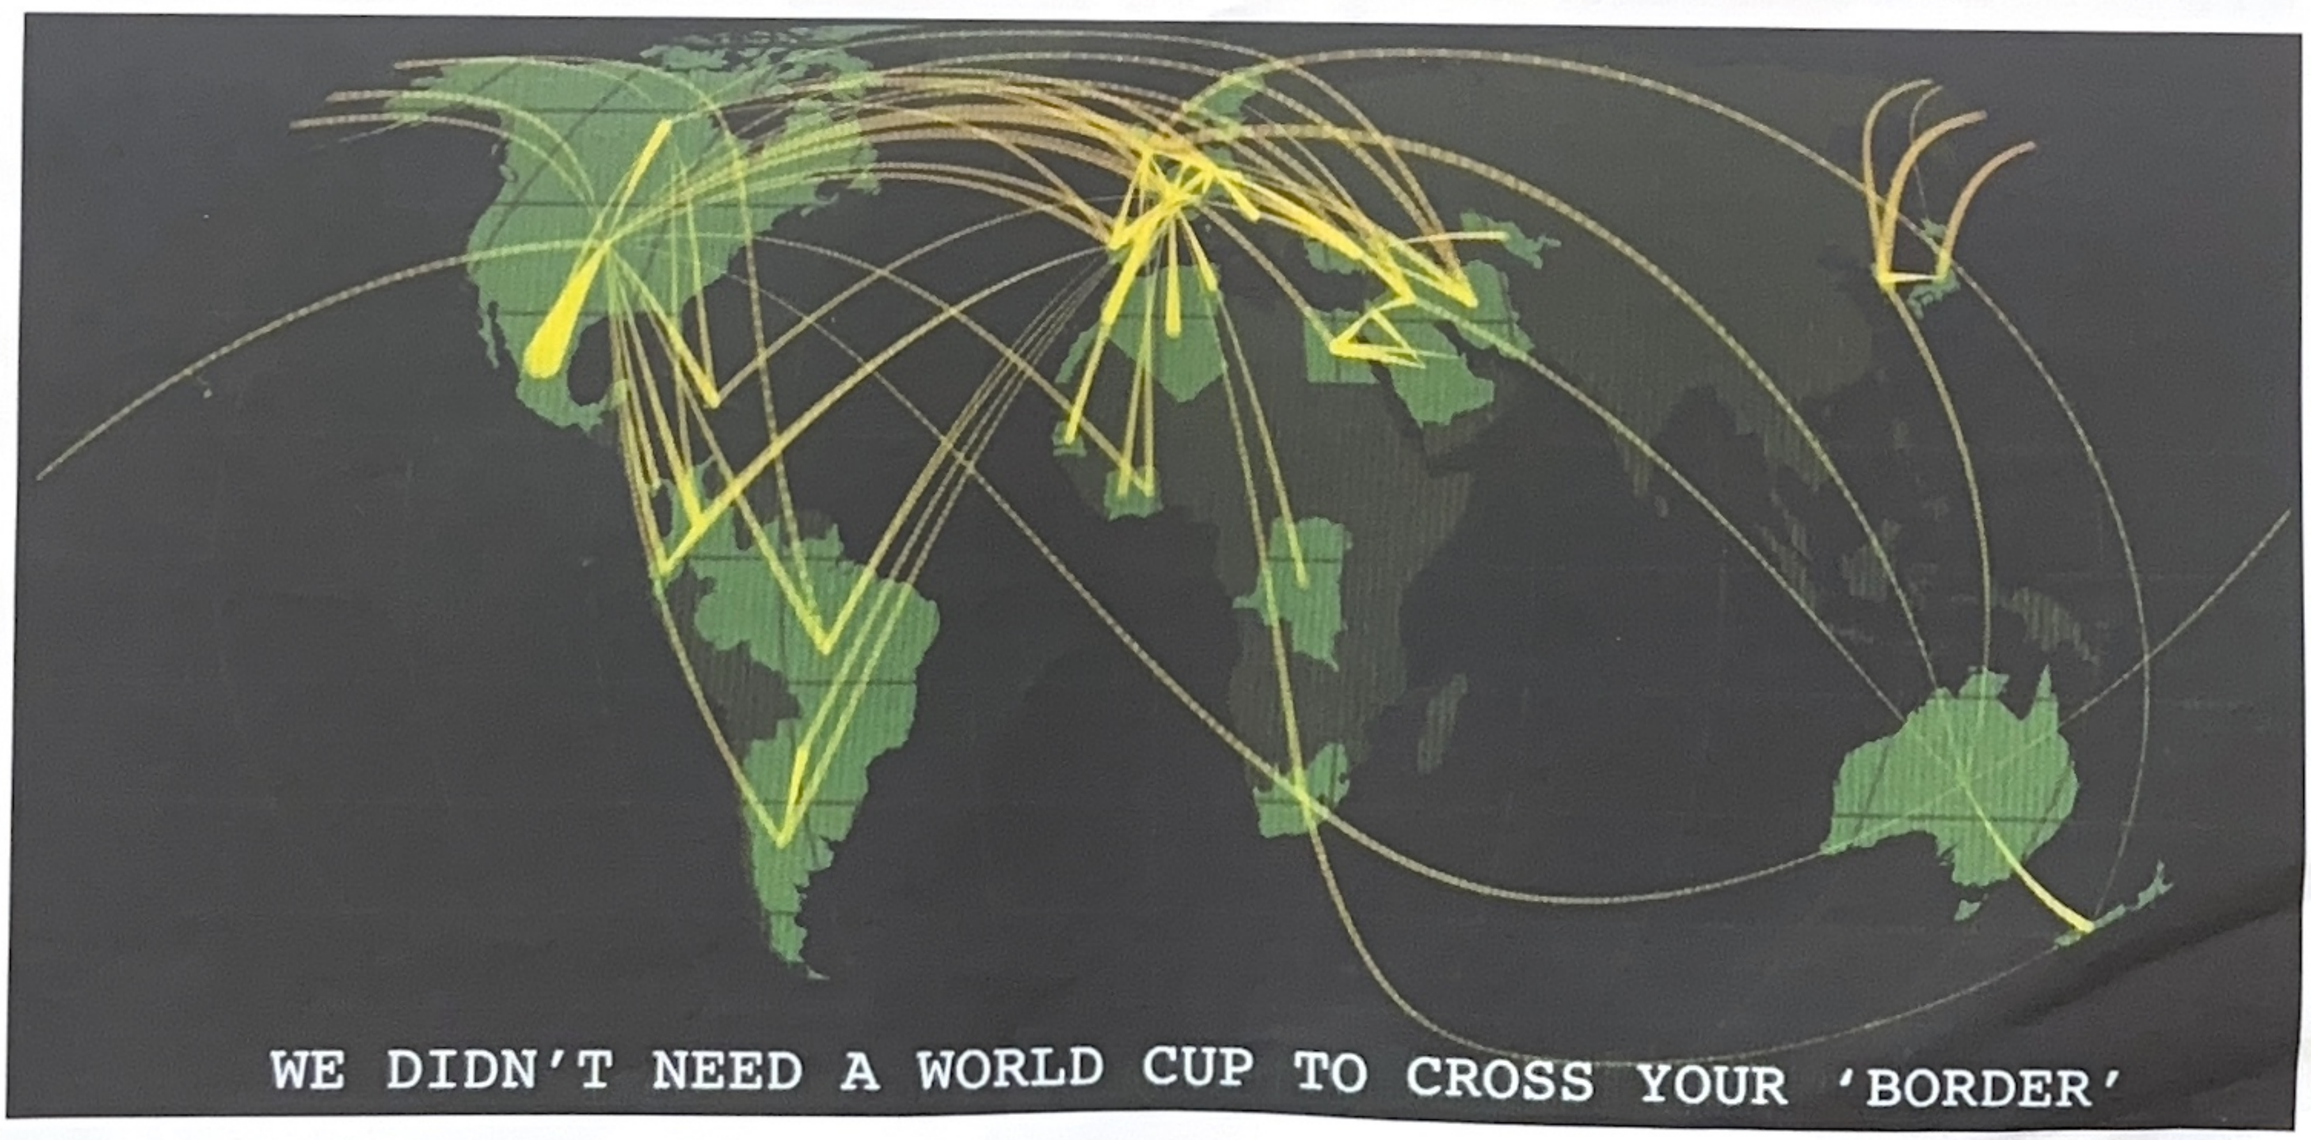

BLEEDING YOU DRY: NET CAPITAL FLOW ACROSS WORLD CUP 'NATIONS'

Each line on this map represents the net flow of people between two nations, as measured by the 'foreign-born' population in each country. Across the world, former colonial empires maintain their grip on their former subjects' bodies and minds, extracting their labor and skills by maintaining a system that encourages them to move to 'high-income' countries such as Canada, the US, and those in Western Europe. Specters of colonialism are particularly visible in Africa, where migrants move towards France, Germany, and the UK. Despite the reliance of the global financial system on cheap and expendable labor, the Western world still penalizes those who decide to cross their arbitrary borders, re-enforcing an arrangement of labor and bodies that has existed since the beginning of capitalism.

BLEEDING YOU DRY: NET CAPITAL FLOW ACROSS WORLD CUP 'NATIONS'

Plotted here is the balance of payments (BOP) for each world cup nation, a measure of how much money leaves and enters a country. In the global capitalist financial system, resources and money flow from Africa, Asia, and the Americas towards financial centers in the US and Western Europe. Even without colonies, the neocolonial monetary system places economic control and resource allocation in the hands of a select few.

WE DIDN'T NEED A WORLD CUP TO CROSS YOUR 'BORDER'

The Sexual Whole; Sex, Spectacle, Sport, and Binaries in the Contemporary Political Imagination

Whether in sports, rap, or politics, in the United States, and the Americas at large, oppositional structures are forming constantly. This friction shifts power around and generates capital accordingly. Reproduction is not inherently good or bad, nor is division entirely negative, regardless of the meritorious connotations of unity. The American Lifestyle is essentially an organization of power play, upon which labor is divided. Division and fragmentation, though related, are not the same. Fragmentation is a sort of division gone wrong, violent perhaps. Imagine fragmentation as a sort of mutant process of division that was forced, or occurred too fast. Americans are used to creating within conditions of fragmentation, but fragmentation is not the only way in which the world can or should operate. The sexual whole, that which invites all bodies into full sexual power, and autonomy, is inevitable, truthfilled, and ultimately a reconvergence of pieces of everyone.

Wholeness creates free space to play and move in for everybody.

Women are missing from these games. We will only know why after understanding what they represent. The recent Knicks championship which harbored a sense of unity amongst NYers as well as 230 million dollars in economic activity, scraped up alongside the beginning of the 2026 "FIFA" world cup hosted by the U.S., Canada, and Mexico. In the shadow of an ongoing violent deportation, detainment, and domestic militarization operation by the "Trump administration," the spectacle of unity and division created by the public exhibition of sports have disgraced the working public. This discussion of the Sexual Whole; BRUJAS non-binary feminist position, in the context of sport, the Trump administration, New York City's cultural nationalism, ongoing domestic and international warfare, and surveillance, is an offering to the process of solution building that demands the impossible by seeing no separate sides to the problems at hand.

The public performance of gendered division—whether in sports, politics, or popular culture—functions as a form of reproductive propaganda. These productions encourage us to identify with opposing teams, sides, and identities, obscuring itself as separate from the power that shapes our lives. The result is a fragmented political imagination that delays our collective achievement of sexual wholeness, what we call the Sexual Whole; healthy, self-determined, working conditions.

Graphic by wahala.wav

Wether in the cases of sexual torture at Abu Ghraib prison by the U.S. military, or in the cases released recently during the controversial release of the Epstein Files, when serious cases of sexual exploitation, trafficking, and abuse are publicized, the response follows a familiar pattern. Outrage erupts. Individuals are condemned. Politicians and media figures invoke the protection of innocent women and children. Yet these moments rarely produce meaningful changes to the social conditions that make exploitation possible in the first place. The spectacle of punishment substitutes for a deeper examination of power, all while pushing oppositional frameworks. The global publicity of sports and sex scandals reify sexual labor divisions and help raise the degree of the exploitation of all workers and women.

This essay develops the concept of the Sexual Whole through an analysis of sport, publicity, and reproductive labor. Building on earlier work around the Reproductive Spectacle, the Sexual Whole describes how social divisions become materially reproductive—sexually, politically, and economically. Rather than understanding society as a series of competing camps, teams, or identities, the Sexual Whole emphasizes the relationships that bind workers together across these divisions.

We propose a relational approach to political struggle and communication. Instead of reproducing conflict through the endless performances of opposition, we ask what it would mean to recognize our shared participation in a larger social process. Rather than cutting one another with the shards of a broken system, we might begin assembling those fragments into something else, something whole.

From this perspective, BRUJAS argues that careful unionization and solidarity across trades and borders would create more solutions for more parties than the sensationalization of opposition. BRUJAS/we argue that reproductive conflict is best solved without participating in the publicity and performance of opposing political forces as our livelihoods are not game, show, or sport.

BRUJAS/Women's role in organising emphasizes a solution embodied in skateboarding and avant garde organising, that reject performance rituals that reproduce the sexual status quo.

BRUJAS/no longer performing the underdog, in a fixed, male-dominated game.

The release of the Epstein files that resulted in the criminal prosecutions of two individuals; Ghislaine Maxwell and Jeffrey Epstein, but included information on high level conspiracy and sex trafficking that connected thousands of high profile individuals, publicized the state's flagrant lack of regard for women, further marginalizing them. It made us see what we already understood; that womanhood is a working condition, that like all working conditions, is strategically disciplined. In intimate settings between confidants, during poetry readings and through community interventions, nothing ever really justifies victims of sexual violence by institutional or state processes. In light of this truth, a serious sense of helplessness and alienation pervades communities when the government themselves are the rapists with immunity. It takes time to process the sexual power of the state. Carceral yearning emerges, but no system or social condition can be locked up. This bikini fucking rock bottom has no feel of hope or democracy.

The rape of children by the capitalist class is a reflection of the severe imbalance of power ocuring between capital and workers. Yet the publicity that surrounds this abuse offers no such analysis. Like in sports, the "losers" and "winners" are announced. Women are always announced as the losers, normalizing the nature of capital, to fuck over workers. Furthermore, by capturing, pimping, and fucking children/teenagers before they become legal workers, the ruling class exposes a sadistic imbalance that reflects the abandonment of liberal social relations towards a full on fascist sweep of resources that underimines the hard work of labor rights organizers across the past two centuries. The 70's and 80's saw a general expansion of the liberal welfare state in the U.S., U.K., Canada, and Australia, that was then retracted under Reagan and Thatcher's leadership. The 2025 "Mandate For Leadership," addressed to Donald Trump, is a re-working of this initial neoliberal effort first written for Ronald Reagan. The text denounces cultural marxism (mutual aid), suggests cuts to social benefits for poor workers, and flagrantly restricts abortion access and reproductive autonomy. The "Mandate For Leadership" details the dismantling of methods of state intervention that mediate the inherent conflict of interests between workers and capital. All the while, bolstering state intervention in women's reproductive lives. The 2024 mandate also suggests parallel policies from the 80's effort to restrict family access to welfare services, including food stamps and cash aid. Trafficking children, violating both child labor and sexual statute law at the same time, is a social metaphor for the type of resource extraction that seeks "virgin materials," because the idea of cultivating a sustainable relationship with the land, and in turn, to women's labor, has been abandoned.

While the liberal welfare state offers dialogue between opposing interest groups (capital and workers), the neoliberal rapist state changes the way the working class population experiences this division, influencing their/our relationship to national and international sport. How are you relating to these games in the wake of genocide and condition of obliterated populations abroad ? Relating to these games in the context of your own restricted food and shelter access ? Relating to these games as the labor rights of farmworkers and migrant workers are undermined ?

The neoliberal rapist state pimps players and teams, further producing a spectacle of nationalist division in an internationally co-dependent world with increasing necessity for protective measures for labor.

Morocco and Brasil tie 1-1

And then at the last second ! OG Anunoby & Jalen Bronson make the winning point together (Game 4).

State-sponsored spectacles such as championships, world tournaments, and international sporting events are familiar collective rituals that normalize the sexual status quo and gendered division of labor. They gather the nation together while simultaneously dividing it into competing sides. The stadium appears unified, but its structure depends upon opposition. This dynamic reflects the broader logic of the status quo: the sexual division of labor.

The relative invisibility of women within these spectacles is one expression of this contradiction. Even when women are absent from the field, they remain present in the labor that makes the event possible. Women work throughout the hidden infrastructure of sport: as care workers cleaning stadiums and hosting spaces, as service workers managing the emotional and physical demands of spectators, as sex workers navigating the economies that emerge around major sporting events, and as mothers raising the next generation of athletes. Women's labor sustains sport long before the opening whistle and long after the final score.

The Sexual Whole asks us to recognize these relationships. We are born whole and fragmented through competition. Athletics does not emerge independently from reproductive labor; it depends upon it.

Equitable conditions for athletics require equitable conditions for care. A young athlete's ability to thrive is inseparable from the material conditions of the household that supports them. When the labor of mothers and caregivers is ignored, underpaid, or made invisible, entire communities are forced into survival mode. Under such conditions, flourishing becomes exceptional rather than ordinary. As Audre Lorde wrote, "we were never meant to survive." Policies that address childcare, food access, housing, healthcare, and public transportation are therefore not separate from athletics. They are part of its foundation. Programs that reduce the burden of reproductive labor and redistribute social resources expand the possibility of life for working-class families. It is no surprise that the dismantling of welfare by Reagen and Clinton was achieved through a smear campaign of Black mothers, who were positioned as opponents of American work ethics, all the while having performed endless unpaid labor to the benefit of the nation's economy.

State level celebratory operations, like those of championships and world tournaments are familiar (i.e status quo) collective rituals that simultaneously gather and fracture pieces of the nation. The absence of visible women in these games is one fraction amongst several oppositional structures in commercial sport. In the invisible production of these games, women are working; as sex workers; trafficked into bars and stadiums in hosting cities, as care workers that clean up watch parties and soothe disappointment, and as mothers who usher in the next generation of great athletic workers, by choice and through love. We are born whole, and fragmented through competition and opposition.

BRUJAS/Global class struggle by working women looks to reclaim the means of reproduction and to generally re-establish a meaningful relationship to the land that does not prioritize ideology, but rather, prioritizes life through labor, and labor organizing.

The rise in popularity of women's sports suggests the emergence of a parallel industry to that of professional male sports, however, this would be only a temporary development in the inevitable movement towards professional co-educational athletics. Trans athletes are already, perhaps, suggesting this future or offering space to explore competition sports outside of the reproductive spectacle, where sports serve as a full dialogue between all bodies committed to practice, as opposed to a reifying broadcast of different labor divisions and competing subjects. We organize as a collective to bring hope to ourselves, to see regular improvements to our conditions. Because we are all necessary players, we will come up with a holistic solution!"

– BRUJAS

EN LA EMERGENCIA LA SALIDA ES COLECTIVA

"En la emergencia la salida es colectiva" es una performance site-specific realizada en el estadio Brigadier General Estanislao López, cancha del Club Atlético Colón, en Santa Fe, Argentina. Colón es históricamente el club del pueblo: nació a la vera del río, ligado a pescadores, trabajadores humildes y barrios populares del sur de la ciudad, y hoy su bandera rojinegra atraviesa las barriadas sabaleras como signo de identidad y pertenencia. El fútbol se vive allí como tradición familiar y popular, un espacio de encuentro intergeneracional más que un simple espectáculo. La acción parte también de la memoria de las grandes inundaciones de Santa Fe, en especial la del 2003, cuando el desborde del río Salado dejó bajo el agua a casi un tercio de la ciudad y afectó gravemente a los barrios más humildes del oeste, con cientos de miles de personas evacuadas y más de un centenar de muertes reclamadas por las organizaciones de inundadxs. Entre los espacios dañados estuvo el propio estadio, que pudo ponerse nuevamente en pie gracias al trabajo colectivo de su comunidad. En la performance habito sola la magnitud de la cancha, sosteniendo una bandera rojinegra con la frase "EN LA EMERGENCIA LA SALIDA ES COLECTIVA". Los colores de Colón se cargan aquí de sangre y luto, pero también de resistencia. Camino y corro como si estuviera por salir a marchar, pero sin nadie más alrededor. Ese cuerpo aislado dentro de un estadio vacío señala la imposibilidad de enfrentar una emergencia en soledad, al mismo tiempo que convoca la imagen latente de lo que podría ser esa cancha llena: una comunidad unida, capaz de reparar, reconstruir y luchar junta. La obra se materializa finalmente como videoperformance y serie de fotoperformances realizadas en el estadio, donde el espacio futbolero aparece como archivo de luchas sociales, dolores compartidos y formas de organización popular.

While looking at the 8-Ball Community is ANTIFIFA cover image of my family from Monterrey, Mexico, I found myself thinking about family and home.

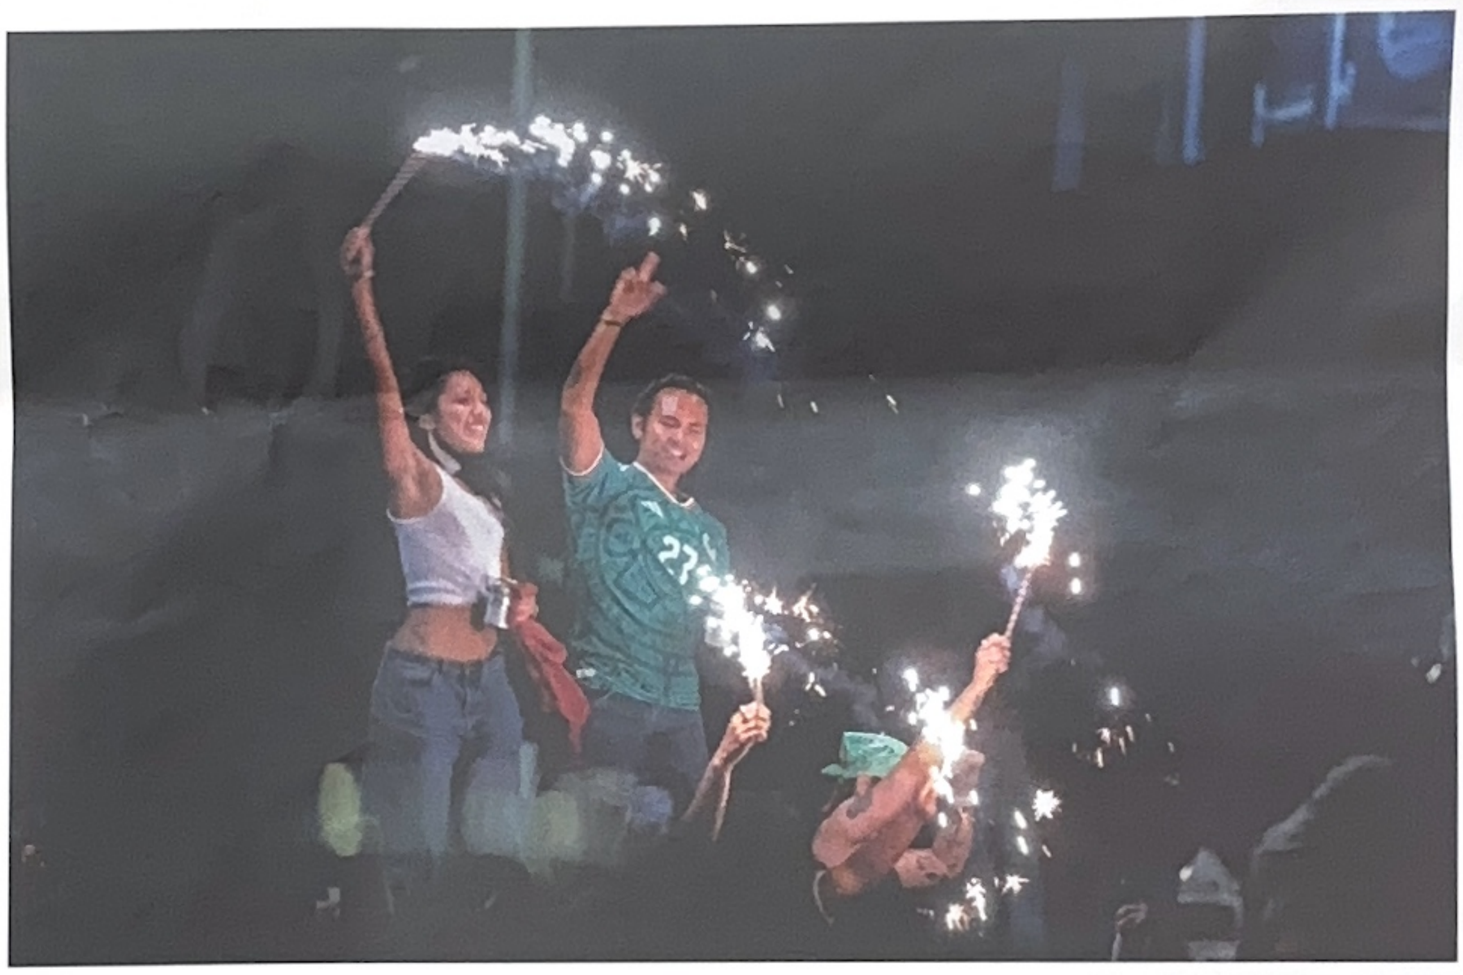

It brought me back to the black and white photograph I made in 2009 of my cousin and his friends standing in the street on their block before a game of fútbol. My family didn't grow up with much, but none of that seemed to matter once the ball hit the pavement. That soccer ball brought everyone together. The streets came alive with laughter and joy.

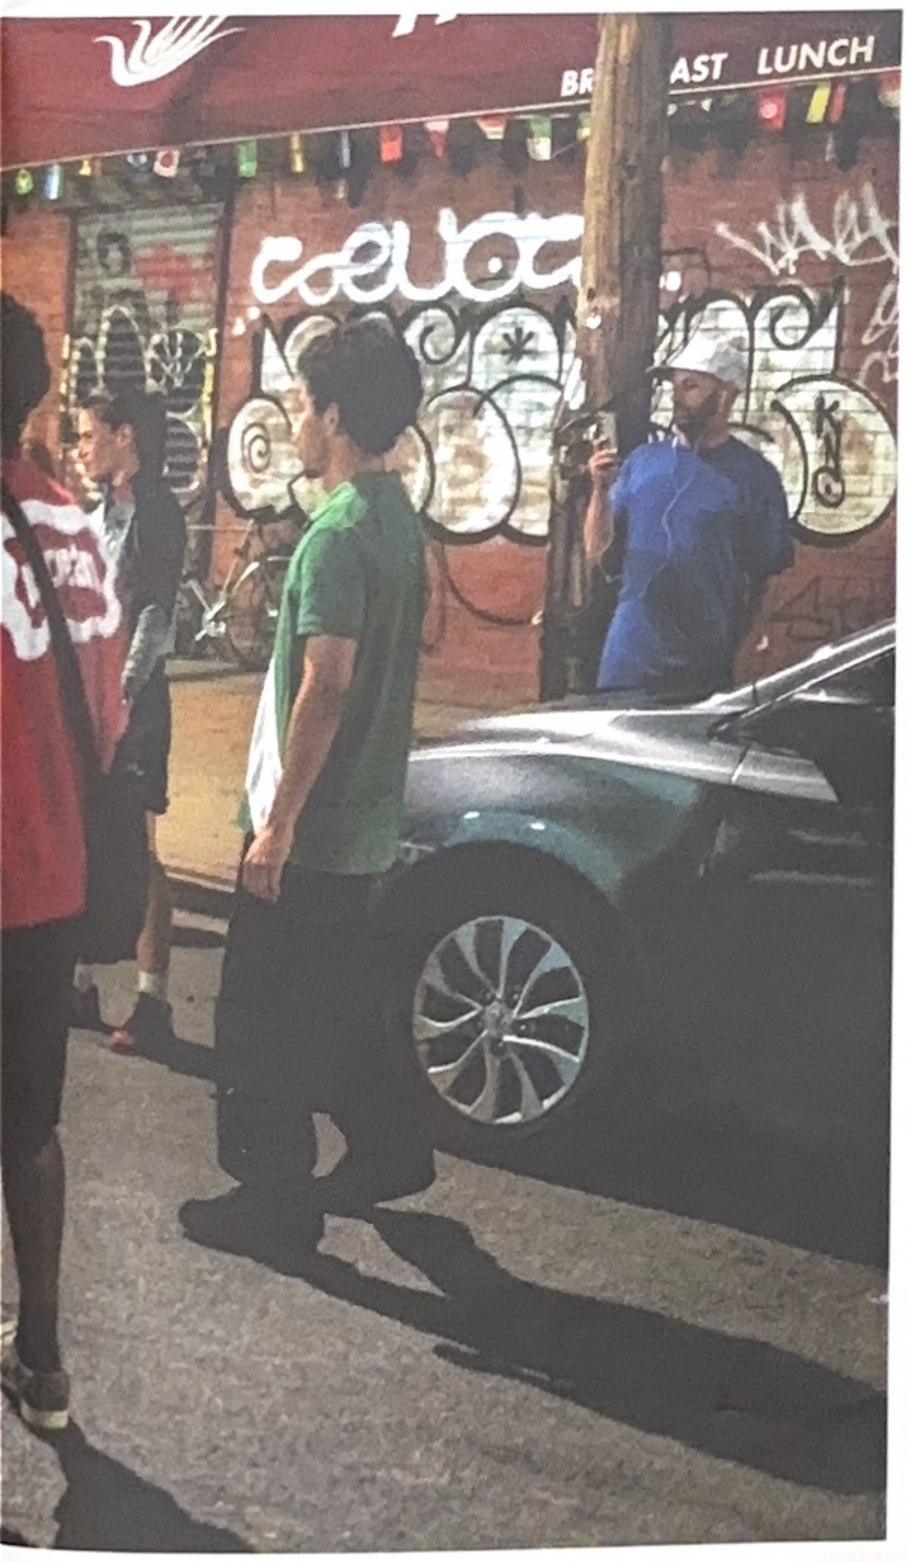

This year's World Cup carried me back to that feeling. While photographing celebrations across New York I watched folks spill into the streets to watch the game. In Bushwick, people danced and kissed after Mexico's victory over Czechia. Under the 7 train at Junction Boulevard in Jackson Heights, hundreds gathered around a converted ambulance showcasing Ecuador's match against Germany. When Ecuador won, the streets erupted. After Mexico's match against Ecuador, fireworks lit the sky.

Each photograph echoed that one image of my cousins. Different streets. Different countries. The same spirit.

It reminded me that fútbol has always been more than a game. I see the humanity and love that fútbol brings out in people. It has the power to bridge generations and create a sense of belonging. Whether it's kids playing in the street with a worn out ball or hundreds of people celebrating a goal together, the essence is the same. It's about hope, pride, unity, family, and home.

PICO LOPES

1815FC SENDS OUR HEARTFELT CONGRATULATIONS TO ROBERTO "PICO" LOPES ON AN INCREDIBLE WORLD CUP DEBUT FOR HIMSELF AND CABO VERDE.
WHAT A SET OF RESULTS AGAINST SAUDI ARABIA, URUGUAY AND EVEN THE EUROPEAN CHAMPIONS SPAIN. NOW GETTING READY FOR A KNOCKOUT MATCH AGAINST ARGENTINA, WE APPLAUD PICO'S COMMITMENT TO THE STOP THE GAME CAMPAIGN AND EFFORTS TO RENAME HERZOG PARK.

The apathy towards FIFA, the World Cup in America and the fact that Ireland isn't there has meant we've not paid much attention to the build up. Now that the Football itself has finally taken centre stage it dawned on us how important and big an achievement on a personal level it is for Pico and his incredible family.

Every footballer's dream is to play in the World Cup, it's the pinnacle of football and he's done it! Not only has he done it but he's played a huge part in securing the draw against Spain, a result any team in the World would take! And he's done it with absolute integrity!

Pico has got the incredible stat of being the only player at the World Cup to have been to one of our Games and, more importantly, it was one of our early Marathon Matches in Hind Rajab Park!

Our campaign, alongside Irish Sport for Palestine and the 1916 Societies, to rename Herzog Park has been ongoing since 2024. The Herzog family has been complicit in the oppression, displacement, murder and genocide inflicted on the Palestinian people since before the 1948 Nakba to the present genocide in Gaza. A public park in Dublin city should not be named after them! We aim to permanently rename the park, in solidarity with the Palestinian people, in rejection of racist Zionism long supported and espoused by the Herzogs.

Hind Rajab is the name chosen to remember a 5-year-old little girl, Hind, killed by the IOF on January 29th, 2024, along with 6 of her relatives. Bakr Family Football Pitch is to remember the 4 young Bakr boys who in 2014 were targeted and killed by the IOF as they played football on the beach in Gaza. Ar dheis Dé go raibh a n-anamach.

We applaud Pico and his commitment to grassroots football, as well as acknowledge his status as the only active League of Ireland men's player to ever play at a World Cup, joining Abbie Larkin and Áine O'Gorman in the history books after their incredible World Cup debuts in 2023.

With a weekly salary of €2,000, Pico held his own against players like Valverde who has a weekly salary of around €350,000 a week, and will face off against Lionel Messi on Friday night. Not only is Pico holding his own on the pitch, but he has been a leading voice off the pitch in the STOP THE GAME Campaign! No matches against Israel! The FAI should boycott the UEFA Nation's League fixture against Israel in November!

It is an absolute honour to have Pico Lopes representing us and the Blue Sharks at the World Cup! Cabo Verde nu bai!

PLAYING WITH GENOCIDE

INSTEAD OF BANNING, SANCTIONING, OR BOYCOTING ISRAEL, FIFA proposes an Israel v. Palestine Opening Match for its Under-15 Festival Debut in the US, September 2026, alleging this as a "gesture towards peace."

ISRAEL HAS MURDERED OVER 1,000 ATHLETES IN GAZA SINCE 2023 - 567 WERE FOOTBALERS.
ISRAEL HAS BOMBED NEARLY EVERY STADIUM IN GAZA. SOME FOOTBAL PITCHES WERE USED AS DETAINMENT CENTERS WHERE PRISONERS WERE BLINDFOLDED, ZIPTIED & TORTURED.
OTHER FOOTBALL PITCHES IN GAZA HAVE BEEN USED AS MASS GRAVES.

What if the Knicks played the world

I don't think as Americans we can fully understand the scope and the devotion the rest of the world has towards soccer. To us, its a middle class game. One that you play in middle school, maybe even high school, but you don't aspire to play professionally. In some ways, it is viewed as "too European" and thus "un-American," so we prefer sports like baseball or American football. Which is crazy because soccer is called the World's Game. It's the sport that you can find literally anywhere worldwide. But it's not as prominent in America. So how can we understand what this means to the world?

I think the closest equivalent we have in American society is basketball. Many other popular American sports require large amounts of space to play, or some kind of specialized equipment. Fields and gear may not be accessible to everyone, but you can always buy a basketball. Some park or on the side of some shitty garage, you can always find or make a court. A kid with nothing to do can go shoot a ball at a hoop alone, or even kick a ball at a goal. Whether the hoop has a net or the goal is just a space on a wall, basketball and soccer are both activities that are accessible regardless of location and resources. All you need is a ball and an imagination.

Since we now have something to compare to, let's talk about devotion. A few weeks ago, New Yorkers tore up their city for the Knicks. We watched one game after another as they all but swept through the finals. The fever got hotter and hotter in the city, the streets full during every game, until finally at last the Knicks won. And who even has the words for what that felt like. So imagine now, what if this team, our champions, were on a bigger stage? What if the Knicks played the world? Do you see now what I mean? What would we not do to show our support if our team made it to this enormous stage?

What if the Knicks played the world and they were denied entry at the airport? Somali referee Omar Artan was denied entry and sent back to the airport he arrived from.

What if the Knicks were searched and detained and humiliated before they even set foot on the court? Players and officials from Palestine, Uruguay, Switzerland, Iraq, Iran, Senegal and Uzbekistan have faced unnecessary and additional searches, visa applications, and detentions before even arriving at a game.

What if the Knicks had to fly to a different country every night because they couldn't sleep on the host country's soil? The Iranian team must fly back to Mexico after every game because they cannot stay the night on American soil, even though they can compete and companies can profit from their participation in the games.

What if the Knicks had to change their uniform, the logo, the symbol we wear so proudly? Egypt and Haiti both have had to change their uniforms for being too political.

What if the Knicks played a fair game and the refs called for the other team anyway? In the Iran vs Egypt game, you can watch the replay and see as an on-sides goal gets called off-sides, one of the many ways this tournament was unfairly swayed against the Iranian team.

On top of that, what if you wanted to go see the game and support your team? What if we were still in the midst of the NBA finals, and you wanted to get a ticket to see the game at MSG and it was $11,000? FIFA is using dynamic pricing for tickets for the world cup and a single finals seat can cost up to $11,000. They are set to make more than 13 billion dollars this tournament, an almost 200% increase from the Qatar games in 2022. FIFA is no different than a mega church, profiting off the devotion of the faithful and promising salvation only to those who can afford the price.

What if you couldn't even afford to get to the stadium? What if the MTA charged you $98 instead of $3 to take a ride? The price of a rail ticket to MetLife Stadium has gone up from $12.90 to $150, then $98 after everyone complained.

What if you showed up to a game and basically the army was there, ready to deport you? Would you feel safe? Would you risk going in?

What if the host country denied you outright the ability to come watch, or charged you $15,000 for a visa? Fans from Haiti, Iran, Ivory Coast, and Senegal are banned from coming to see the games unless maybe they can prove they are valid ticket holders, which they can risk paying the price but might not be allowed in anyway. The visa bond program was suspended but initially was set to require a $15,000 deposit for B-1/B-2 visitor visas from 39 countries. Iranian and Haitian fans are still denied entry.

What if the Knicks played the world and you just wanted to see your team play a game that everyone loves. What if you were reminded every second of every moment that this was an opportunity for corporations to squeeze you dry of every penny you have. To exploit your love of the game and your love of your team. To bombard you with ads, to deprive you of water, to take your money, to take the dignity of your team. And the whole time the game they let your team play is rigged, players getting put at a disadvantage, and actively conspired against. Would this feel right? If this happened to the Knicks, would we let this stand? The Knicks won and we almost destroyed our city. Imagine what we'd do if all this was happening to them instead. Would we even watch?

THEY'RE ALL WEARING PINK BOOTS AT THE FIFA WORLD CUP 26

Before all of that, there was MADISON

Before "soccer" became "football", there was FÚTBOL.
Before there was a cooling break and a half-time show, there was Cuantos vagos para un peloteo extremo.
Before there were 32 teams, there was traete un six, unas cartas y algo para picar.
Before it was cool, fashionable, and hype, there was a group of Latino Americans coming together to play fútbol as a sign of identity, family, and community.
Before any political, commercial, and infrastructural agenda that feeds on the extraction and exploitative instrumentalization of the words community, migrant, Latin America, and fútbol, there was MADISON.
A group of working-class Latino Americans who have been showing up for each other, their neighborhood, and their families at the same playground in Bushwick, week after week, for more than 15 years. It is not a trend or a commercial plan; it is a group of friends doing what they love and exercising an act of freedom with only one goal: to enjoy one another's company and provide support in times of instability. MADISON is a four-year project about a group of friends from Latin America in Bushwick who build a sense of belonging through fútbol, music, and culture in Brooklyn.
Giving relevance to the mundane and repetition of rituals and how these become acts of care, resistance, and resilience in the face of migration and impermanence.
This place was thought out, planned, and activated by a group of friends. It has been a nourishing anchor of belonging for a group of Latino American men and their families in the midst of the perplexity and stupefaction of migrating and settling in the north.

MI CASA NO ES TU CAMPO DE JUEGO

The 'American Dream' is in many ways almost exactly like the FIFA World Cup - an extravagantly corrupt pyramid scheme selling you the euphoria of victory built on your own enslavement. You play the game with the illusion that the best, most passionate, most tenacious talent will triumph, hoping to be rewarded with the golden trophy of justice for all the years of sacrifice you and your people have paid for with bodies, blood, sweat, and tears. You eat, sleep, pray, breathe for the glory, the recognition, the respect. To win is to be untouchable. You can feel your heart racing in your eardrums. The tears fall down your face. You are safe. You've taken back your dignity and everyone is there with you, cheering and clapping.

But that's not how it really goes. Everyone knows that dreams and games are just vignettes of suspended belief. They are fractals of reality. Both end with the sobering realization that everything you experienced is just an augmented simulation of the real world. You wake up from the emotional frenzy shocked and confused as to why you're the only one who thought it was real. Even the commentators know it to be staged. That's why they can convince you it was such a close call, better luck next time.

So why do we choose to play the same game every four years knowing the rules have been written so we never win? Why do we choose to even play by the rules if the rules are rigged to play us? Audre Lorde said "the master's tools will never dismantle the master's house." Countries, borders, governments, international institutions, and sports authorities, are all just as fabricated as the game and the dream. But because the great majority continues indefinitely suspending their belief for the legitimacy of these spectres, rancid bald white men keep burning through billions upon billions of dollars to supress our outrage with bells and whistles, one spectacle after another. Half-time shows! Presidential campaigns! More algorithms! Billionaires getting married on a yacht while blowing up rockets! Fashion Week! World Championships! All the while, the most atrocious crimes against humanity, war, and destruction ravage our lands and kill our children.

The night of June 10th, 2026, the United States bombed numerous water reservoirs 1,012km from Tehran, destroying the only drinking water sources to more than 20,000 residents across 10 surrounding villages. This was the second reported attack in three months as the United States struck a desalination plant in the Strait of Hormuz in March, cutting off the main water supply to 30 villages. International humanitarian law classifies water infrastructure such as treatment plants, pipelines, and drinking water installations as civilian property, thus considered illegitimate war targets and therefore defining these attacks as criminal acts. That same day, marked 980 days of the US-Israeli genocide in Gaza. The news of these war crimes, however, hardly made headlines.

The following morning, as the fires still smoked and the rubble piled, millions put on their jersey of choice and logged into the nearest screen to spectate the grand premiere of the most prolific live reality television contest broadcast on the planet. The twenty-third iteration of the Fédération Internationale de Football Association Men's World Cup would kick off from the heart of old Tenochtitlan, 505 years after its destruction. Trumpets blared and tourists cheered. Meanwhile, hundreds of mothers, students, teachers, agriculture workers, and indigenous community members from around the country organized encampments and blockaded the streets surrounding the Azteca stadium. Police threw tear gas and kettled the youth. Over 130,000 people have disappeared but the government can't do much about that, they said. Six months prior, FIFA awarded its very first 'Peace Prize' to the genocidal United States of America as "an award to recognize exceptional actions for peace and unity... bestowed on behalf of all football-loving people from all around the world." Gianni Infantino personally presented the award to Donald Trump, one Fifascist shaking hands with another.

Over 600,000 people have been ethnically cleansed from the United States via deportation since last year. That's one abduction every 100 seconds. Set a timer now. By the time you finish reading this stack of papers cover to cover, count how many people have been kidnapped while you turned another page. Currently, over 70,000 people are held captive in the most deplorable conditions– more than 6,000 people detained are children and at least 500 are 3-years old or younger. I wonder what games they like to play and what they dream about. I remember Jakelin Caal Maquin who was eight and Felipe Alonzo-Gomez who was seven. They both died in ICE custody two weeks apart. I remember Josué Ramírez Vásquez who was 2 years old when he died six months after. I remember seeing the photos of Oscar Alberto Martinez and his 2-year-old daughter, Valeria, who drowned together just miles from where I grew up. Then again two years ago, a mother and her two children drowned in Eagle Pass after Texas military prevented Border Patrol agents from rescuing the family floating along a line of razor buoys tethered to the riverbed.

My home is lacerated by barbed wire, iron fences, watch towers, infrared cameras, water nets covered in saw blades, and checkpoint, after checkpoint, after checkpoint. The borderlands are sacred like no other place. El umbral. The only thing I can compare it to is blue hour at sunset, or the wind, or the sound of the river coursing to meet the ocean. But that song is interrupted every time I get asked "Are you a US Citizen?" In occupied Palestine, the same watch towers, barbed wire fences, and checkpoint, after checkpoint, after checkpoint lacerate the neighborhoods of the West Bank. I wonder if the kids playing fútbol in Ramallah hear the song at blue hour too.

A man was fatally shot by Immigration and Customs Enforcement on the streets of Houston, Texas the day after Mexico played their last world cup game at the Azteca. I've seen more people share their grief and devastation about Mexico losing to England on home turf than be outraged about a man being murdered by the gestapo in broad daylight. Maybe because his name was Lorenzo Salgado Araujo, and not Alex Pretti or Renee Good. I remember Claudia Patricia Gomez Gonzalez. La migra shot her in the head while she hid from CBP in Rio Bravo, TX. She was 20 years old. I was just a year older than her that summer, just a few miles away. I didn't hear the gunshot or see her body before she was returned to Guatemala to be buried by her family. I do remember hearing her parents' voice cracking on the phone during the community vigil we held at the Basilica de San Juan. I think of the mothers who continue searching for their disappeared children. I can't imagine how they brave the pain of organizing their own search brigades to find countless mutilated body parts inside black bags scattered throughout the desert. May they all find their children and finally give them a safe and loving place to rest.

I know the reason we keep playing is because we've already lost so much that we've also lost the fear of losing. I just wish others would realize this is not a game.
My home is not a playing field.

The Beginner's Practical Guide to Establishing a Fascist Dictatorship: A Reader's Guide to the Jan 6th Capitol Attack, the Prairieland trials, and the 2026 World Cup.

Step 1: Define sedition and terrorism suficiently vaguely, such that those terms can be applied at your whim whenever your subjects need the binkie of xenophobia to soothe their nerves.

Domestic terrorism famously has no concrete legal definition in America, so offenders are usually charged with other related crimes such as hate crimes, firearms-related charges, treason and seditious conspiracy, and providing material support to terrorists (owning anarchist zines). This last one is especially concerning since it encourages the masses to be literate, and should be punished with a prison sentence of 30 years: this was the prison term given Daniel Sanchez Estrada, a "leftist antifa terrorist cell member" for moving a box full of zines after the Prairieland demonstration. Sanchez Estrada wasn't at the July 4, 2025 noise demonstration at Prairieland ICE Detention Center in Alvarado, Texas, but that doesn't matter very much. It is best not to dwell on such things when there is other work to be done such as passing an executive order to define antifa as a Domestic Terrorist Organization to set a legal precedent for punishing leftist activism. NPR for North Texas reports that the designation is the first of its kind in history, not used even for notorious, longstanding groups like the Ku Klux Klan.

Prairieland is the first domestic terrorism trial to lead to convictions of alleged antifa cell members. Fascism advances its own dark irony. According to the Associated Press, Antifa is simply short for anti-fascist. It is not a single organization but a decentralized movement of far-left militant groups who are against fascism, and may confront or resist neo-Nazis and white supremacists at demonstrations. In fact, the opposite of fascism is anarchy, or lack of centralized hierarchy. You could almost laugh at the joke of this sham trial. The setup: anti-fascism being defined as an American domestic terrorist group. The punchline: the eight Prairieland defendants themselves declining to identify with an antifa group. Many of the eight testified that they did not know each other or were only loosely affiliated. In their trial, Benjamin Song defended anti-fascism as a belief, saying: "What kind of people are not against fascism?"

Colloquially, sedition is defined as language intended to incite insurrection against the governing authority, but regarding the legal definition, Edward Jenks writes in The Book of English Law that sedition is "perhaps the very vaguest of all offences." Today, the federal government criminalizes seditious conspiracy in 18 U.S.C. 2384, which states, "[i]f two or more persons in [the U.S.], conspire to overthrow, put down, or to destroy by force the Government of the United States, or to levy war against them, or to oppose by force the authority thereof, or by force to prevent, hinder, or delay the execution of any law of the United States, or by force to seize, take, or possess any property of the United States contrary to the authority thereof, they shall each be fined under this title or imprisoned not more than twenty years, or both."

Really think about the semantics: "If two or more persons conspire..." Seditious conspiracy is a thought crime. The minimum standard categorizing the conspiracy as "seditious" is not defined, except by the word "force." What is force? The broad language of the statute gives an uncomfortable amount of leeway for aggressive prosecutions. For example in the summer of 2020 during BLM, many cities saw violence and looting in connection with the protests over George Floyd's murder. At that time, the Department of Justice issued a memo to prosecutors encouraging them to explore federal seditious conspiracy charges. In the memo, Deputy Attorney General Jeffrey Rosen writes that a federal seditious conspiracy charge "does not require proof of a plot to overthrow the U.S. Government, despite what the name might suggest". The mask is off.

Such laws are not designed to keep the nation safe. They are only designed to maintain basic governability, or in other words, to entrap the members of the nation into dazed complacency under the governing class, even while killing us off one by one.

Pedantic and inconsistent interpretation of sedition law and resulting criminalization of activism are common behavioral responses of an unstable authority struggling to maintain power over its republic. But beware, that while establishing the vague thought crime will be productive toward a burgeoning fascist rule, you may encounter collateral damage: Nine Oath Keepers were found guilty of seditious conspiracy to stop the presidential transition of Joe Biden during the Capitol Riot. Clearly, the executive blanket clemency of all 1,300 rioters convicted is deeply hypocritical, considering the combined 450 years of prison time sentenced to the eight Prairieland defendants, but a hypocrite does not a fascist make. In fact, the position of the Capitol Attack rioters just so happened to appeal to Trump's ego by defending his "illegitimate" election loss, but the terms by which the state interacted with Jan 6th directly aligns with how it has handled Prairieland too.

The goal of the state in both cases is to create power by encouraging a punitive culture of obsession with national security, and creating an existential sense of the nation under attack. This is a classic hallmark of the authoritarian playbook: fear births power. Mental fracture and personal pain stage the individuals of the nation for exploitation. The Cohen Institute for Holocaust and Genocide Studies explains succinctly: "Trauma allows for the embrace of the irrational. Escapism fosters a minimum of self-respect and the ability to vent judgement against a world in which people cannot exist with dignity. Traditional lifestyles are uprooted or threatened by technological changes, wealth inequity, and unequal access to goods and services. Contempt for truth and reason reflects the despair of the follower who is socially and spiritually adrift and cynical. Providing a coherent explanatory narrative and political rallies reinforces a sense of belonging and is fueled by confirmation bias. That things "just happen" is unacceptable to the follower who, in turn, must believe the infallibility of the leader to reclaim their own pride and sense of worth." By pure fact of turnout, by commitment, intensity and length of the destructive conspiracy and by literal damage to property and body, the Capitol Attack was much more criminal than Prairieland. But the administration and the DOJ's message is unified in both the cases of Prairieland and Jan 6th. You are in danger. Your world is coming to hands and guns. Desperate people are on the loose and you are one of them. I will protect you when I can control you.

Step 2: Crack down on citizenship and naturalization laws, free speech protections, and civil liberties!

But don't go re-inventing the wheel, take from the good old American playbook: In 1798, the United States stood on the brink of war with France. The Federalist Party under John Adams advocated for a strong central government. They believed that the Democratic-Republican party's criticism of Federalist policies was disloyal, and that aliens living in the United States would sympathize with the French during a war, as Democratic-Republicans at the time identified with the French revolutionaries' struggle against monarchy as a part of a larger global republican movement. As a result, a Federalist-controlled Congress passed four laws, known collectively as the Alien and Sedition Acts.

These laws raised the residency requirements for citizenship from 5 to 14 years (in the Naturalization Act), authorized the president to deport aliens deemed dangerous to domestic peace (in the Alien Friends Act), and permitted their arrest, imprisonment, and deportation during wartime (in the Alien Enemies Act). The Sedition Act made it a crime for American citizens to "print, utter, or publish...any false, scandalous, and malicious writing" about the government. If these sound shockingly familiar you are on the right track.

I know what you're thinking: "Media suppression, I get, but why restrict naturalization standards?" This is because we want to establish an out-group by which the border of the prerogative state can be defined. The dual state is a model in which the functioning of a state is divided into a normative state, which operates according to set rules and regulations, and a prerogative state, "which exercises unlimited arbitrariness and violence unchecked by any legal guarantees". The term was coined by Ernst Fraenkel to describe the functioning of the Nazi state.

Choose an already hated group such as migrants, so that the in-group, the members of the normative state, will not notice at first that they are trapped too. They will be too busy enjoying the false peace won by the unlimited violence enacted in the prerogative state, think borderlands, prisons, the White House. We will tell them that this unfettered force and cruelty is necessary to enjoy the normative state, with the crosswalks and public schools. Create the zero-sum illusion. There's not enough free lunch for all of us, even though we live in the richest empire in the world and in the richest empire of all time. Later, the people at the crosswalks will ask why the border of the prerogative state keeps expanding into their own beautiful white neighborhoods, but by then it will be too late.

Step 3: Now that Steps 1 & 2 have set the stage, escalate the general level of real danger, as well as the perceived. If there is no good war to blame, try attacking Iran as this will also be profitable for you.

Adams called the Alien and Sedition Acts of 1798 "war measures," to defend their unabashed suppression of free speech and violation of civil liberties, now protected by the First Amendment and the Geneva Conventions. (Note: It's actually okay to violate these things as long as the Supreme Court is stacked in your favor). War is a good time to abandon civil liberties! During both World Wars, the Alien Enemies Act provided the legal authority for the internment of German mericans, and during World War II, it also provided the legal authority for the internment of Japanese Americans.

Not only does fear of outsiders escalate during wartime, the scale of contemporary warfare including all the civilian violence is incomprehensible. Co-existing with the realities of war and genocide are themselves traumatic, and cause reality's seeming Arules of order to fracture into spirals of total irrationality. Why should children die in a genocide they did not create? There is no reason to it. There is no reason at all.

In March 2025, the Trump administration invoked the Alien Enemies Act to forcibly deport 137 Venezuelan nationals to El Salvador, where they have been indefinitely jailed in a notorious maximum-security prison. Prior to 2025, the statute had only been used three other times and never outside the context of a war declared by the US Congress. President Trump's ongoing campaign to detain and deport Venezuelan men under the Alien Enemies Act is without precedent, and its legality is being tested in domestic courts. Earlier this year, Human Rights Watch published a report advancing a larger argument: "...not only are President Trump's actions in violation of international human rights law, but the 1798 Act itself is inherently incompatible with the United States' international legal obligations and should be repealed outright."

The FBI estimates 2,000–2,500 people entered the Capitol during the attack. Some vandalized and looted the offices of House speaker Pelosi and other Congress members. Rioters assaulted Capitol Police officers and journalists. Rioters occupied the empty Senate chamber, while federal law enforcement officers defended the evacuated House floor. Pipe bombs were found at the Democratic National Committee and Republican National Committee headquarters, and Molotov cocktails were discovered in a vehicle near the Capitol. Trump resisted sending the National Guard to quell the mob.

The punishment for the Prairieland protesters exceeds the lengthiest prison sentences given out for the attack on the Capitol on January 6. Enrique Tarrio, the leader of the Proud Boys who was convicted of seditious conspiracy, was sentenced to 22 years in prison. Stewart Rhodes, the leader of the far-right group the Oath Keepers, was sentenced to 18 years in prison (just over half the sentence for moving a box of anarchist zines). Multiple January 6 defendants have since been involved in additional crimes after being pardoned including homicide, burglary, theft, stalking, child pornography, sexual assault on minors, and driving under the influence. On January 20, 2025, during the first day of his second term, Trump granted blanket clemency. By June 2026, at least 97 defendants had been arrested and charged with other crimes.

There is no reason to it. There is no reason at all.

Step 4: Give the people a circus.

In 1931, the International Olympic Committee awarded the 1936 Summer Olympics to Berlin. In April 1933, an "Aryans only" policy was instituted in all German athletic organizations. Jews and Roma (Gypsies)—were systematically excluded from German sports facilities and associations. In the United States, some Jewish athletes and Jewish organizations such as the American Jewish Congress and the Jewish Labor Committee supported a boycott, as did a number of liberal Catholic politicians, black activists and athletes, and many college presidents. However, once the Amateur Athletic Union of the United States opted in a close vote to participate in the Games, other countries fell in line and the boycott movement failed. Following the conclusion of the 1936 Olympics in Germany, the Nazi regime, bolstered by the legitimacy granted it by 89 silently compliant medalists and apparent athletic demonstration of its Aryan superiority, immediately accelerated its antisemitic violence, territorial expansion, and militarization, which ultimately culminated in World War II and the Holocaust.

The U.S. government has expressed an honest and direct disinterest in justice, safety, and human rights. It has successfully wielded the legal system as a tool of state hypocrisy. It has lost grip on humane communion, civil servitude, even play, pleasure and fun. It has enabled and empowered a fascist program of incompetent, aggravated violence just to turn around and use the civil reaction to that authoritarianism as a case study for expanding state power. And now, as if just to rub it in our silly little faces, the United States invites the world home to play soccer, the stands insidiously hawked by our very own Gestapo, the MetLife stadium just 9 miles away from Delaney Hall where hundreds of DHS prisoners have organized a hunger strike to protest the medical neglect, spoiled or inadequate food, and other torturous conditions at the facility.

What is sedition? Does the prisoner's open letter from Delaney Hall count as sedition? Does NPR's January 6th archive containing a database of all the January 6 convictions and amnesties count? How about now that those statements have been wiped from the DOJ website? Is the situational irony of the United States hosting international FIFA fans during this time of state sanctioned white supremacist brutality enough to invoke insurrection? What about the designation of an anti-fascist political view as an organized domestic terrorist program? I will help you find the punchline to that joke: 450 combined years of prison for the Prairieland defendants, legally convicted.

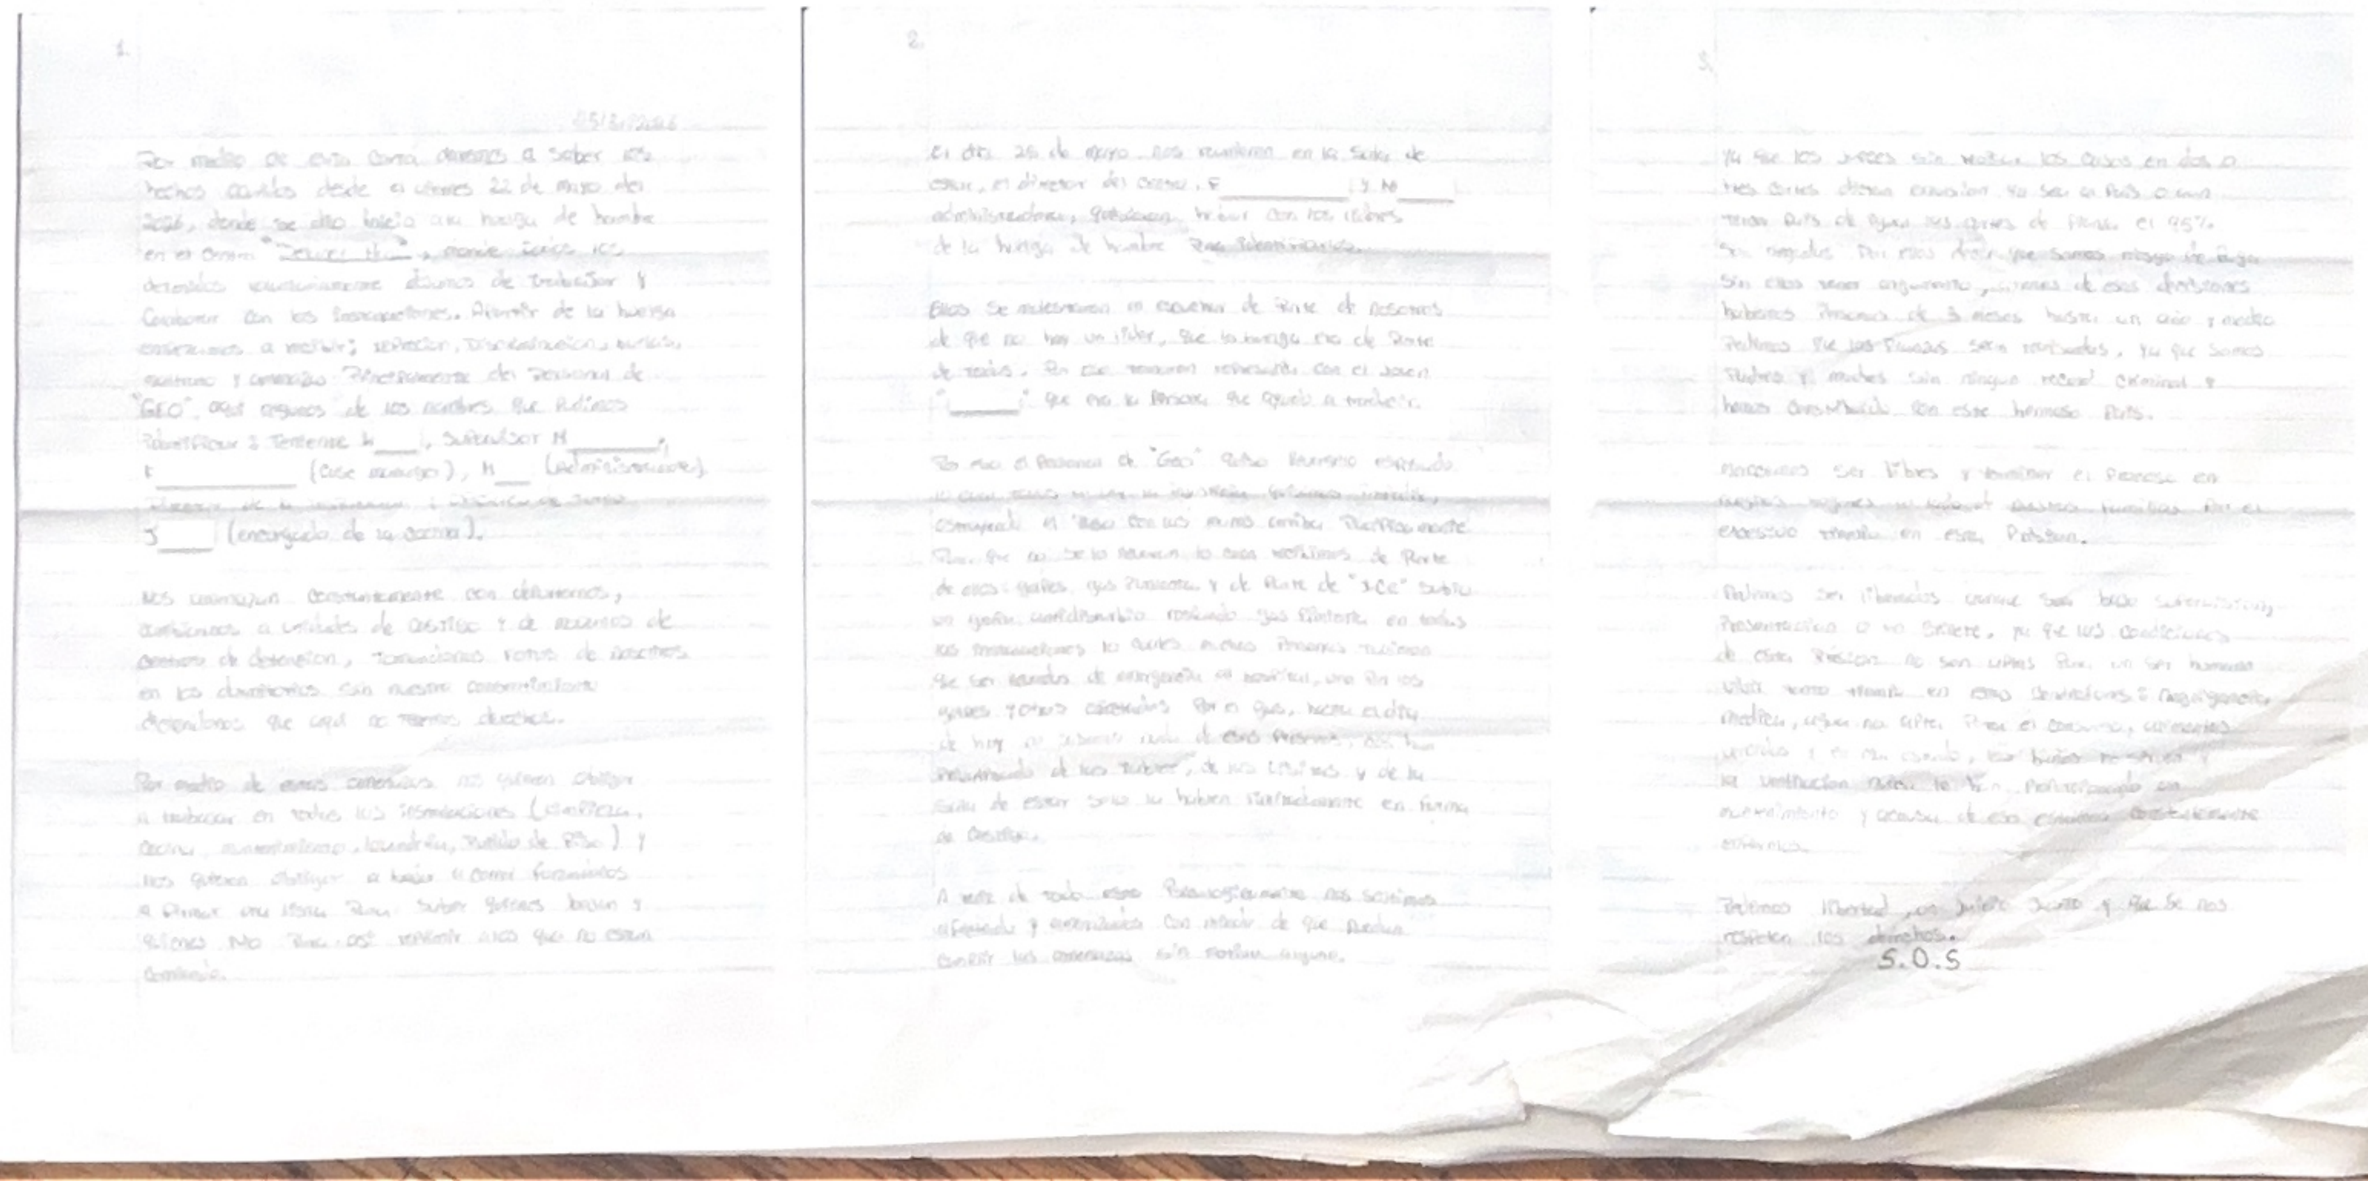

When the morning headline reads like an Onion article, and reality itself has reached a default state of tired, situational irony, the red siren should go off in your mind. There's no boiling point at which liquid unrest will vaporize magically into gaseous revolution. The administration's actions now encapsulate roughly a decade of consistently devolving American far-right authoritarian nationalism, winding tightly in shards of itself. It has been gearing toward this surreal break for a for a very long time. If there was a cliff, we ran off of it long ago, and now are simply witnessing freefall: a series of natural consequences.

A major world power, burning out of its prime years can host a huge international soccer game in the midst of unchecked state violence enacted by recently deputized white supremacists dressed up in Totenkopf masks and tactical gear. The final games will be held just miles from an ongoing prisoner's hunger strike, and reading the prisoner's demands, one begins to wonder if we are inside or outside the penal colony. As the optical illusion of the normative state and prerogative state's two faces flatten, and your eye learns to identify both the hag and the beauty at once, the circus sweeps into town on a cold wind. Some members of the entertainment crew are frisked at the border and turned away. We go on. We cheer for the games and a chill sweat forms under our clothes, atop our skin. The circus is in town. It has been authorized by the state.

So why, considering all this, did the United States invite FIFA to host the World Cup finals in New York? After my flight from New York to Seattle, I couldn't remember which movies I'd seen on the plane. I know vaguely that I had enjoyed them, but I couldn't recall anything specific. The airplane movie which fled my mind like a dream as soon as it ended, did not stir me. It made me laugh at times, though about what, I can't remember. It had served its function, merely providing a place to rest my eyes, so that I could sit still for a while, slack- jawed, analgesic, despite my obvious discomfort.
